AMONG the many reasons given by the Baltimore Sun for its support of Dewey is that the man chosen to honest, reliable, progressive governments.

of Dewey is that the man chosen to the presidency in November will be obliged to devote the most of his attention during his incumbency to problems of peace rather than of war and that Mr. Roosevelt has proved himself unequal to cope with domestic affairs, particularly those affecting the national economy.

"The strains put upon our economy during the first eight or nine years of Mr. Roosevelt's tenure," it said, "nave not been dissipated but intensified by the new strains of warfare." . "Muddled improvisations" of Mr. Roosevelt "delayed the meshing of our productive machine of our productive machine which poor government and bad

In the judgment of thoughtful persons, whether all these things are done, and the way they are done—the methods, the timing, the cothe methods, the timing, the coordination, and the principles followed—will determine the future pattern, not only of American industry, but ultimately of government. One course would move toward preservation of privately owned industry the other toward government collectivism. One outcome of the other might be partly the result of conscious intention, but might be the result of mistaken judgment or mistaken methods of judgment or mistaken methods of of the proposed federal standard: mistaken timing.

Victory for Principle

It is with provision for workers thrown into unemployment that the pending measures and current debate in Congress mainly deal. An early problem was whether the grants to unemployed workers should be administered by the federal government at Washington, or by the state governments. It now seems practically settled that the administration shall be by state governments. This is a victory for the principle of preserving the states as units of government, for avoidance of further increase of federal bureaucracy. All the states already have systems of unemployment insurance. To add to these systems the work of paying out post war employment grants should be simple.
